

Nikolaos Liazos
Assistant Professor of Turkish Language and Culture
Department of Balkan, Slavic and Oriental Studies
University of Macedonia
Thessaloniki, Greece
nliazos@gmail.com

Nikolaos Liazos was born in Istanbul where he attended bilingual classes at the minority schools. After his basic education, he came to Greece and continued his studies. He graduated from the Pedagogical Academy of Thessaloniki, the faculty of Theology and the faculty of Education of Aristotle University of Thessaloniki. He was trained at the School “Dimitrios Glinos” of Aristotle University. He achieved a MA in Education at the Pedagogical Department of Aristotle University and he also obtained a doctoral degree from the Aristotle University for his thesis: “The role of the Turkish school books of minority education to the development of intercultural relationships between Christians and Muslims in Western Thrace”. He is a native speaker of Turkish and masters it fluently, as a result of his continuous staying and studying at the schools of Turkey. His proficiency in the Turkish language has been certified by the University of Istanbul. He has taught the subject of Turkish Language and Literature and Teaching, supervising the students' teaching practices in the Turkish language and Practice exercises in the Turkish language EPATH. As from 2011, he teaches the Turkish language Turkish terminology economic and social sciences Contemporary Turkish Literature at the department of Balkan, Oriental and Slavic studies. His scientific interests focus on Turkish language and literature, modern Turkish culture, translation, Ottoman and Turkish history, and topics in Western Thrace minority education.